TREEPRONE No. 12.

HONGKONG, NOVEMBER 25TE, 1867.

ONE of the lines of argument adopted by the Hon, A. P. MAcEwen in his speech on the Estimates was decidedly peculiar. Sir WILLIAM MARSH, then administering the government, in a speech he made at the end of 1886, sketched the financial position of the colony, present and prospective, and in the unexpected appearance of some masty doing so, referred to the extraordinary works skin disease on his person. Neither is the then in progress and the amount that would fact of the clothes being iroued and got up erop of opium in the district of Ispanan alone is probably be required for their completion is in the unsavoury atmosphere of a Chinese 1888. The sum now actually asked for on washerman's shop reassuring, the possibility account of these works in the Estimates for next year is in the total about twenty per cent. less than that mentioned by Sir WILLIAM MARSE; one of the items is larger, tem is not provocative of more evil in this to Hongkong. There must be some special WILLIAM MARSH; one of the items is larger, tem is not provocative of more evil—in—this quality in the Persian drug to attract the English market, for we believe a very small quantity and the latter with aiding and abetting him in the purse. The fact remains, however, that on these The fact remains, however, that on these particular items the sum now asked for is less than it was anticipated it would be, and on this Mr. MacEwen argues that if an experienced auditor like Sir WILLIAM MARSH could be twenty per cent, out, looking two washed in sweeter water and ironed in a years shead, it is very probable the sum put clean and wholesome building. down in the Estimates a year later will probably not be required. If Mr. MACEWER were required to-day to estimate what personal expenditure during 1889 would be and he named a certain sum, at the end of 1888 modified his previous estimate in view of different circumstances that had arisen, the argument would be that because his first estimate was too high his second one must be too high also. His Excellency the Governor had some difficulty in following the reasoning based being investigated by two high officers, disgraces on such a complete non sequitur and those who read the hon, gentleman's speech would | dered by another sister or cousin. probably share that difficulty. How an experienced business man, speaking with the sense of responsibility he must feel in the Legislative Council, could advance such nonsense as this under the guine of financial criticism it is not easy to imagine. Possibly he lost sight of logic for the time being in his anxiety to draw attention to the 20 per ordered to shift his Flag to the Main, having cent, mistake of the "experienced auditor," been promoted to Admiral. Among other important works mentioned in the Governor's Message presented to the last meeting of the Legislative Council as " required to meet the increasing needs of the Colony" we note that Public Laundries are meluded. The necessity for such institutions is becoming already apparent and will soon be increasingly evident. The new conduit from Tytam will impound several of the streams formerly dammed up by the Chinese washermen, and the water at their command Moreover, as the hill slopes become more utilised and built upon, it will be more undesirable to have the streams defiled by the washermen. The colony's lines should either be washed in the streams outside the limits of Victoria or public laundries should be infastidious and reasonably careful of the community no option but to entrust their raiment to the Chinese laundries. Yet it is a country teeming with matters of interest for all; while the undeveloped resources of Thibet may, in the matter of trade, prove in the near future of extreme importance to India. It is, indeed, quite within the limits of probability that Thibet will share in the advancement which nations Thibet is a most remarkable country, and its

From Lhassa right up to this mountain two splendid avenues of majestic trees extend. These avenues are nearly always filled with crowds of devout pilgrims, devotees who have come from great distances, and whose travel-soiled garments testify their long journeys. These pilgrims may be observed, with long Buddhist chaplete in their hands, telling their beads with the greatest fervour, and apparently oblivious of their surroundings. Among these groups may be seen a sprinkling of Lamas richly attired, and mounted on fine borses, splendidly caparisoned. These are Lamas of the Court, and their duty is to collect the alms of the faithful. Alas, sacordotalism is everywhere the same!

It is said that strangers are readily allowed to visit the Dalai Lama, but as all visitors are compelled to prostrate themselves before him in worship, this would probably prove an insuperable objection to many Europeans. The Grand or Dalai Lame is the recognised political and religious head of all the Thibetan countries. They are mostly built of stone or bricks, claborately whitewashed all over, excepting the borders over the doors and windows, which are painted red and yellow. These being the prevalent sacred colours, are accept, and he would knock "Kicking Jimmy" used for nearly every object that requires a coat of paint. The houses in Lhassa are painted and whitewashed annually and therefore always look clean. The interiors, however, do not correspond in this respect with the exteriors. Look into one of these Thibetan houses, and one is reminded of a whitened sepulchre; the rooms unswept, smokir, and dirty, littered and enounbered with a miscellaneous assortment of furniture, cooking, utensils, wearing apparel, and odds and ends—such a collection as only a Thibetan household could bring together. An orderly Thibeten interior would be a rarity. The poorer folk have their houses built of mud, but these also are completely whitewashed outside. This November -- For London-68,426 lbs. congou. whitewashing is done so well that it is at 9,576 lbs. scented crange pelice, 81,039 lbs. scenttimes difficult to tell what materials the houses ed caper, 26 bales waste silk, 2,000 boxes ginger are built of. The Thibetans belong, as is well known, to the great Mongol race, and possess their peculiar facial characteristics—small contracted black ryes, high cheek-bones, pug noses, wide mouths, thin lips, and soanty beards. The ordinary complexion of the people is tawny, though among the upper classes there are many quite as fair as Europeans. In stature the Thibetans attain to middle height, and are agile, supple, and vigorous. They are exceedingly given to dancing, their movements in the dance being cadenced and easy. Gymnastic exercises are also very popular among them. As a race they are extremely frank and generous, and are so light-hearted that while walking about they are continually humming some popular song, or it may be Bhuddist psalm. The men wear their hair long, allowing it to flow freely over the shoulders. The dandies of Lhassa are indeed exceedingly careful of their raven looks, anointing them freely with melted butter, and some of them go the length of braiding their hair like the women, and adorning the tresses with jewellery composed of precious stones and corals. But these women have the finger pointed at them, and are looked upon as black sheep in the fold. It must be confessed, however, that lamentable men's faces and the repulsive aspect it produces. As a people the Thibetans are brave, and face death fearlessly. They are very religious acenters largely into their everyday life. They are indeed superstitious, but not so oredulous as the flarters. Though they have many good -gard they place on cleanliness; in this respect in no wise prevents them from being fond of display, and rich and sumptuous clothing. The the same neglect of simple sanitary rules, and show the sad need there is for an energetic municipal board. The idea of connecting Lhassa with a municipality appears just now Utopian;
